

Nurturing: Attachment

Coventry EPS

Psychology for You

024 76788400

EducationalPsychologyService@coventry.gov.uk

www.coventry.gov.uk/edpsych

Attachment

Attachment is a psychological theory describing the bond that is formed between infants and primary care givers. It is within close attachment relationships that children learn to make sense of themselves, other people and social interactions.

Research in the field of psychology highlights a clear link between pupils' experience of early relationships and difficulties in learning, responding appropriately to others and regulating behaviour. We are well placed to support you by outlining the theory and evidence base of attachment, and advising on strategies. We have a proven track record in attachment training and can work with you to develop bespoke solutions for your school. Our existing training packages are listed below.

Nurturing Children

Nurturing Environments

This training is delivered to a variety of professionals. The course outlines child brain development, how early relationships develop, the links between relationships and learning, as well as examining the strategies that can be implemented to support children.

Neglect and Attachment

Commissioned by the LA Safeguarding board and working together with Health and Social Care, this training examines the impact that neglect can have on child development.

Language of Love

This workshop examines the impact of attachment difficulties on children's learning and shows practitioners how to use language, as well as strengths-based and positive approaches, to make a difference.

Raising Awareness of

Attachment Difficulties

For people who have received the 'Nurturing Children Nurturing Environments' initial training this one-day course offers a more in-depth exploration of Attachment Theory, with a greater focus on strategies that can be implemented in education settings.